Elijah Stewart Inspires the Next Generation of Energy Professionals

Through his pioneering work with the American Association of Blacks in Energy internship program, Elijah Stewart is helping train, mentor and inspire a new generation of African-American students to pursue careers in energy-related fields.

Elijah, a supervisor of Metering, Engineering and Planning, volunteers his time and expertise with the association's Virginia chapter's legislative issues and public policy committee. According to the group, Elijah's work was instrumental in providing college students throughout the commonwealth the opportunity to earn credit for their internship experience. Elijah is an exceptional tutor, skilled communicator and gifted teacher who knows how to motivate his students to strive for excellence.
